

Deciding on Anthropology at Miami?

Anthropology at Miami emphasizes a broad four-field approach. Experiences are available in a wide variety of courses, independent studies, and field research. The core courses lay a foundation in biological anthropology, archaeology, cultural anthropology, and linguistic anthropology.

Faculty will be glad to answer questions about work in their area and the Chief Departmental Advisor can answer programmatic questions.

Miami's Admissions Office offers an orientation program that can include an opportunity to meet with the Anthropology faculty, to talk about your personal interests and see the Department.

Look through our website, consider our courses and requirements, and think about the possibilities that we can offer you. The quality of Miami students is reflected in the high expectations and close interaction between students and faculty in Anthropology.
