See the Possibilities!

The Miami University School Psychology Student Affiliates set out to celebrate their profession by increasing awareness of their field. Through presentations, information tables, a bake sale, and an article in the newspaper, the 2009 Awareness Week was deemed a great success.

Presentations were planned in the Psychology Building as well as the Education Building in order to give targeted informational sessions to undergraduates that lasted almost an hour. Approximately 50 people were in attendance at the psychology presentation alone! The presenter received numerous emails after the presentation expressing great interest in the field (one is highlighted in the right column of this page!). Smaller presentations were also given in numerous education and psychology classes as well.

An information table was on display at the Psychology building during the Monday and Tuesday of Awareness week. School psychology students were present at the table for 6 hours each day. The information table included an informational poster, NASP brochures, as well as free homemade cookies!

A bake sale was held in the education building in order to increase awareness. Students in the program baked treats to sell, NASP brochures were handed out, and the school psychology students spoke with the customers about school psychology.

Also during awareness week, each cohort in the Ed.S. program at Miami selected a family to buy gifts for during the holiday season through adopt-a-family.

Finally, a small write-up was placed in the student newspaper about school psychology awareness week and the presentations that were given.
